WOMEN'S TORAH STUDY

Sometimes the hardest thing about studying Torah can be asking the first question. Lisa Zale, a Shearith member since childhood, explained that there are times when she reads a verse of Torah and she doesn't even know what questions to ask. A new weekly Women's Torah Study at Shearith Israel, led by Rabbi Shira Wallach, offers a welcoming space where studying together makes figuring out the questions, then asking them, easier.

Lisa joined a Torah study nearly a decade ago, studying each week with an Orthodox teacher. The group, made up of eight Conservative and Reform women, became great friends. "Recently though," Lisa says, "I started to feel that the lessons were taught in such a black and white way. I wanted to learn more than each week's Torah portion, I wanted to discover what the parsha taught us about our world today."

That vision resonated perfectly with Rabbi Wallach's teaching style. "When I teach," she explains, "I don't ask, did this actually happen? All the biblical scholars in the world can't prove something did or didn't happen. I ask, why is this in the canon? To me, that's a more interesting way to approach text and learning." As Lisa and Rabbi Wallach made plans for the Women's Torah Study they both knew they wanted it to be open to the community.

Rabbi Wallach, a graduate of Barnard, an all women's college, is familiar with the rhythms of learning in a group exclusively of women. "As a rabbi, I believe it's crucial to create spaces for everyone to draw closer to our tradition, but this group allows us to elevate women's voices and issues in a protected, supportive space.

Recently the group studied Genesis 19, in which the Torah tells us why God must destroy Sodom. After learning about the city's moral depravity, God's angels rescue Lot and his family from destruction. "God told Lot not to turn back," Rabbi Wallach says, "but he did not tell Lot's wife. And Lot didn't tell her, either. When she looks back as she leaves her home she's turned into a pillar of salt. Even though I've studied this story over and over, the group brought ideas that surprised and delighted me — things I'd never considered." The women suggested not seeing Lot's wife's fate as a horrible punishment but as a gesture of divine grace. They suggested it would have been too hard for her to spend the rest of her life knowing that she left her home and legacy behind, but as a pillar of salt she became a memorial to her family and home.

When asked how the group has so quickly bonded and been willing to share ideas, Rabbi Wallach said that each week begins with a brief, paired study. A chevruta is a study partner. Chevruta comes from the Hebrew word friend. "But there's a difference, explains Rabbi Wallach, "Think of it this way. A chaver (friend) is someone you go out to lunch with — a chevruta is someone who will tell you that there's broccoli stuck in your teeth." The concept is that your chevruta pushes you to be the best possible version of yourself. They challenge you and help you grow. Lisa explains, "Beginning the study by speaking with just one other woman allows you to come to the bigger discussion feeling comfortable with the material so it's easier to share your thoughts with the larger group." The paired study also creates community. "I've met women I didn't know before," Lisa added.

Many people worry their Jewish knowledge is not up to the demands of a study group. Lisa explains that while she grew up at Shearith, attending religious and Hebrew school three days a week, she still can feel unsure about her Jewish education. Rabbi Wallach chimed in, "Everyone feels that. Even rabbis." Rabbi Wallach remembers at seminary coming into minyan and worrying she'd put on tefillin incorrectly. "Growing up, I was always the quiet kid in class, not wanting to ask questions because that would betray my ignorance. But as a teacher, there's nothing I love better than when someone asks a question that challenges even our most basic assumptions. Asking questions is the best way to learn and help others learn."

Getting the group to talk has not been an issue. The sharing of ideas and concepts has been so rich that Rabbi Wallach finds herself speed-teaching the last five minutes of class to make sure she's covered all her planned material.

Recently Rabbi Wallach opened the study by asking the women to go around the room and share if they wanted to dedicate their study to someone. "I was so inspired by the women's stories of loved ones that they wanted to honor and by heartfelt stories of friends who were ill, I actually worried that the study wouldn't be worthy. But of course, as we shared ideas it was a wonderful, inspired session.

"I'm so thankful to Lisa," Rabbi Wallach says, turning to her friend. "Thank you for bringing this group to me. I just keep pinching myself. Teaching and learning with these women makes my heart buoyant."

CHANUKAH AND PURIM— JOYFUL CELEBRATIONS OF JEWISH HEROISM

by Rabbi Adam Roffman

Though they are nearly three months apart, Chanukah and Purim are inextricably linked in the Jewish calendar. There are many similarities—a focus on food and fun and on creating indelible memories of joy and frivolity—for children, in particular. Unlike the three pilgrimage festivals, Pesach, Sukkot, and Shavuot, there are no restrictions on work and though both feature plenty of ritual, customs on these holidays are less formal and less weighty. Our services on these days feel less like an obligation and more like a celebration.

But there is one other major theme that ties the two together and makes these holidays unique—they are both about heroes. On all other holidays, to borrow a phrase from the seder, we praise God's might, but on Chanukah and Purim, we marvel at the achievements of Jewish men and women who saved our people from destruction.

On Chanukah, we remember the triumph of the Maccabees over the Greek empire that defiled our Temple and threatened to stamp out our particular way of life. Matityahu and Judah are usually celebrated for their military strength, but it was their leadership and political savvy that truly brought about our salvation. They united two disparate groups of Jews—one group that believed that only God and God's messiah could rescue us from the hands of our oppressors, and another group that wanted to bow to what they perceived to be a superior culture, the next step in the advancement of human progress. The lesson behind the victory of the Maccabees is that heroes do not sit around and wait for God to save us. Like Herzl and Ben-Gurion, Judah understood that, quite often, God works through us, not for us. The Maccabees had the courage to say, simultaneously, to their own community and to the Greek society that surrounded them—enough! We will not allow the oppression of sameness, of a secular culture that stands in opposition to our values, to deny our own uniqueness and our particular sacred destiny.

On Purim, our heroes achieved the same national result, but through a much more personal journey. Though Esther displayed similar courage in defending her people, her victory was not displayed through strength of body, but through strength of character. With patience and perseverance, she earned the trust and loyalty of her husband, King Achashverosh without attracting suspicion from her adversary, the evil Haman. But like Judah Maccabee, Esther also put her life in the line to say what needed to be said. Entering the King's court without asking permission, a capital offence, she condemned Haman for plotting genocide against her people, despite the personal danger she faced. She understood, as did her cousin Mordechai, that bravery is the byproduct of risk and sacrifice with no guarantee of success. She was granted no divine promise of protection. In fact, God is completely absent from the scroll of Esther—yet another reminder that these holidays teach us that Jewish survival and revival is not just a result of divine will but also of human agency.

At every brit milah, we place our newborn children in the keseh shel Eliyahu, the chair of Elijah, at the start of the ceremony. This is a gesture of profound significance and profound optimism. Elijah's presence is a symbol of imminent redemption, of the completion of the sacred task of repairing the world—a heroic act, if ever there was one. When we place our children in Elijah's seat, we remind ourselves that each child entered into our covenant with God has the potential to alter the course of history—not just for Jews, but for all of God's people. Each child is a messianic figure, each newborn life a potential hero.

It's no accident the Chanukah and Purim fall during the winter—the darkest time of our year. Because heroes are only required when hope is short and challenges seem insurmountable. It's at these times that we must remind ourselves that part of the responsibility of being Jewish is finding the hero within each of us—to do what must be done, to say what must be said, no matter how great the opposition, no matter how significant the risk.

In that spirit, we look forward to celebrating these remarkable and joyous holidays with you in the days ahead. And get your superhero costume ready so that you can join us as a member of the JEWstice League on Erev Purim, Wednesday evening, February 28!

MAZEL TOVS

Mazel Tov to the Mitzvah Meal Program, which congregant Joel Roffman organized in 2009. The group recently provided their 600th meal since the program's inception! And the number of lives who have been touched by these acts of gemilut hasadim (loving kindness) is even greater. Mazel Tov to the many volunteers who make this program possible and who help create a holy community.

Mazel Tov to Carol Aaron, Dawn Aaron, Sandy Donsky and Zona Pidgeon for Co-Chairing the Legacy Senior Communities YES! Event on November 2, 2017.

Hayley Isenberg (basketball) and Ashley Isenberg (basketball), daughters of Lori and Judge Randall Isenberg competed in the 2017 Maccabiah Games. Hayley's team defeated Israel to win gold, and Ashley's team made it to the final round.

Sophia Fineberg, Yavneh Senior and daughter of Ilana and Daniel Stromberg, was awarded the Audrey Kaplan award for Future Inspiring Women of the Southwest on October 19 by the Southwest Jewish Congress.

ENGAGEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. Todd Aaron of Dallas, Texas happily announce the engagement of their son, Bennett Harrison Aaron, to Amanda Paige Gross, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Gross of Park City, Utah. Their wedding will take place in early spring of 2018.

It is with great pleasure that Shelli and Marshall Goldberg announce the engagement of their daughter, Jamie Patricia Goldberg, to Elliot Gerson. An August 2018 wedding is planned.

It is with great pleasure that Michael and Pam Pidgeon announce the engagement of their daughter, Micole Pidgeon, to Andrew Cobert. Andrew is the son of Ann and Scott Cobert. Micole and Andrew plan to wed in May of 2018 in Dallas.

It is with great pleasure that Rikki Rutchik & Kirk Rovinsky and Jay & Virginia Krasoff announce the engagement of their daughter, Mazelle Krasoff, to Matthew Prescott, son of Myra and Stuart Prescott. Mazel Tov also to Mazelle's grandparents, Elaine and Morris Rutchik.

Bam!

Mahj 101 was a fantastic success!

Thanks Gail Mizrahi for teaching and sharing your love of the game!

MEMORIAL PLAQUES

Ensure the memory of your loved ones are a permanent part of the story of our congregation. Purchase a Memorial Plaque to be installed on our memorial walls. Submit your order by February 1, 2018 to ensure that it is part of our dedication at the Yizkor service on the 8th day of Passover, April 7, 2018.
